

Queen Is Shown at Her Household Work During Maui's Fair

Among the special exhibits at the Maui Fair the Bee and Honey exhibit attracted considerable attention. The bees were exhibited in an observatory hive that was so constructed that none of the occupants of the hive could hide from view. The colony of bees within the hive consisted of one comb of brood and bees with a queen. During the first day of the Fair the queen could be seen most of the time at work laying eggs in empty cells. The brood in the comb was of all stages of development, and young bees could be seen hatching out of the cells at all times. The mandibles of the young bee could be seen as it clipped off the ring of wax that covered the end of the cell, and then a few moments later the young bee would emerge from the cocoon. The larva of the bee spins cocoons the same as butterflies, silk worms, etc.

Food Flavors Honey

The honey exhibited consisted of a sample of extracted algaroba honey, and a sample of cane honey in the same condition. There was also a comb of algaroba honey built in a special frame of five by eight inches in size. However the comb honey exhibit did not last out the Fair as on Friday when the school children were out in force, some of them could not resist sticking their fingers in the comb, with the result that it was ruined for exhibition purposes. One of the features of the honey exhibit was that it called attention to the difference in quality of Hawaiian honey. Algaroba honey is water white and in quality compares favorably with clover honey.

Cane honey has a very rank flavor and is unfit for table use. In fact it takes but a small amount of cane honey mixed with algaroba, or any other floral honey, in order to spoil it. So it behooves the housewife here in Hawaii when she purchases honey to ascertain whether or not the honey has any of the can product in it. A good rule to follow is—not to purchase honey unless it is water white.

Nature Needs Bees

One of the facts concerning bees and honey, is that the bees is a necessity in nature. If the bees of the world should be suddenly eliminated, the result would be that most of the plants of the world would not be fertilized, and as a result the fruit crop, and many seed crops would never mature. It is the bee that carries the pollen from one blossom to another and thereby fertilizes the plant. In order that the bees will visit the flowers nature has provided the flowers with nectar, or honey as it is generally called. Chemically honey it is grape sugar, and is the easiest sugar that the human system can handle. It only takes about one half as much work for the stomach to digest honey as it does cane sugar.

As to how much honey a colony of bees will produce, is a matter that depends on the location, and the season. As a rule, ornamental flowers produce no honey. They are either wind fertilized, or they depend on their gaudy color to attract insects to carry the pollen.

Climate and Production

Then again, climatic conditions have a lot to do with the secretion of nectar by the blossoms. Hot dry winds dry the blossoms up, while rainy weather as a result wash the nectar out of the blossoms. Then too, management of bees plays the same part in the crop of honey secured, that it does with other stock or plants. For instance, the queen that was on exhibition at the Fair, her bees during the algaroba honey flow at Wailuku—and which flow was from May 15th to July 10th, 1921, produced sixty pounds of algaroba honey. But this crop of nice white honey was the result of good management. The bees were forced to breed up strong and were kept at work. The average colony in and about Wailuku produced little or no algaroba honey during the past summer.

Judge Burr, who exhibited the bees at the Maui Fair, works with his bees without any protection and very seldom irritates the bees so that they have any desire to sting. But to work bees that way the operator must know just exactly what he is doing and have had a lot of experience. The average person will do well to have a good veil and smoker and also should have some standard text book on bees and should study it thoroughly before attempting to handle them.

"Life"

With a title such as this, it is small wonder that William A. Brady's Production "Life" has proven such a wonderful success, for life is full of interest to us all, and the great goal of life is happiness. Mr. Brady in this wonderful production gives us "A little gleam of time between two eternities" flashing upon the towering steel and living, hurrying clay that is called New York. Beaming into human hearts, lighting up their struggles, their sins, their loves. Dancing through Broadway's revel and jazz, down into the roaring canyon of Wall Street. Peeping into palaces and hovels and prison cells. Seeking always happiness; such is "Life"; all of it a thrill, with pleasure, sorrow, sin, and cruelty selfishness and hate, it matters not to "Life" as long as happiness is gained. What is Happiness? See this picture "LIFE" and well will you understand.

"A Sister of Salome"

Is a story of a woman's dual existence. Gladys Brockwell plays the part of a young prima donna who under the influence of ether, is carried back to early Roman days and a previous existence as a dancing girl, the idol of a high priest. The action which is well sustained throughout the picture is as mystifying as ever when the girl emerges from her dream and the dramatic situations end in a final denouement which comes as a complete surprise. Miss Brockwell is supported by William Scott as leading man. Ben Deeley in the "Heavy" and Edwin Booth Tilton one of the screen's best character men.

"Partners of the Night"

"Partners of the Night," covers a series of seven magazine stories, that formed a most successful feature of the kind that the Metropolitan magazine ever published. It is a story well known to the readers of this popular magazine. It is an exciting story of a young lieutenant detective who has considerable troubles of his own in following the duties of his profession, the main trouble of course is a woman and the only one in the picture the part is cleverly played by Pinna Nesbit. The things to look forward to in the play are, a new type of detective, a $10,000 cigar that turns a big trick, the one kiss in the plot, the frame up on the hero who
